Dear Sir:

I would appreciate your help concerning this matter. I have a $5 bill which has been handed down through my family for years. I am not interested in selling or trading it but for my own satisfaction I would like to know the approximate value of this bill. I am enclosing a picture of it which I have taken from you article in the April-1964 Edition of the Numismatist. The serial no. of the bill is 53893 In grading it, as you would a coin, I would say its about - good to fine -. condition.

I would certainly appreciate your help in this matter for I have not been able to locate a catalogue showing this particular currency.

thank you very much. Looking forward to hearing from you.

Dear Mr. Skewis:

A $5 Continental Dollar is a nice item to have and should be worth at least $5.00 to $10.00, depending on its condition. There are a few dates which are scarcer, but you did not indicate any date on it.

It so happens I am writing a catalogue of Colonial and Continental money at the present time. There are paper money catalogues which were issued over ten years ago listing the values of some of these notes.

I hope I have been helpful.
